NARRATIVE - OPERATIONS IN FRANCE
(October 1944)

On 1 October 1944, the 443d AAA AW Bn (SP), Lt. Col. WERNER L. LARSON commanding, assigned to Seventh Army and under 5th AAA Group and 35th AAA Brigade was in tactical position defending 36th Infantry Division and VI Corps elements and installations in the vicinity of Eloyes, France. Four platoons were with division field artillery battalions, two platoons were protecting VI Corps field artillery battalions, and two platoons, one with the 36th Division Air OP and one on forward road nets, were available for special assignments.

At this time LePanges had been secured by the 143 RCT which had later moved to an assembly area in the vicinity of Chamois. The 141 and 142 RCT's were holding hills 712, 728 and 827 against strong German counter attacks.

On the morning of 1 October the second platoons of "B" and "C" Batteries engaged two ME 109's approaching Docelles from the northeast along the main road from Bruyeres. Several hits on one of the planes were observed, but no crash was reported in the vininity.

The first platoon of "C" Battery, assigned the mission of forward road net protection, advanced, on 1 October, to the vicinity of Faucompierre to protect the 36th Infantry Division detrucking area and the main division supply route.

On the second of October a directive was received from 5th AAA Group which stated that the 443d AAA AW Bn (SP) would be relieved of the mission protecting the 977th FA Bn upon the arrival of the 433d AAA AW Bn. The second platoon of "D" Battery, protecting the remaining corps artillery battalion, the 141 FA, was not to be relieved of its assignment as yet and this fact was relayed by radio to the battery commander of "D" Battery.

A radio message was also sent to the battery commander of "A" Battery which contained instructions to move two sections of the second platoon, then with the division air OP, to protect the division class I and IV dumps and engineer supplies in Docelles.

A message to all batteries from the battalion S-2 on 2 October discontinued the "Interior Artillery Zone" (I.A.Z.), a zone in which friendly planes were forbidden to fly during the hours of darkness. Reports of unidentified planes, however, were still to be sent to G.O.R. both day and night.

Narrative - Operations In France (Contd)

The 141 RCT of the 36th Infantry Division, meanwhile, had been ordered to capture and secure Herpelmont while the 143 RCT protected the division's right flank.

Early in the afternoon of 3 October three platoons engaged two ME 109's approaching Docelles from the north. The planes veered to the west when the second platoon of "B" Battery first opened fire, and, as they approached Eloyes, they were engaged by both platoons of "A" Battery. One enemy aircraft is listed as probably destroyed.

2nd Lt. SQUIRE G. HASKIN received, on 4 October, Special Order Number 184, Headquarters, Seventh Army which promoted him to 1st Lt., effective 27 September 1944. Lieutenant HASKIN joined the 443d AAA AW Bn (SP) on 6 March 1944 and was assigned at that time to "D" Battery as assistant platoon leader of the second platoon. Since that time he has served throughout the Rome-Arno, Southern France, and German campaigns.

On 5 October an Intelligence Memorandum to all battery commanders explained the AAAIS which was to be initiated in the battalion. OP's were to be operated by each battery to expedite early warning of approach of enemy aircraft and to supplement the GOR warning system already in existence.

The two sections of "A" Battery protecting the Division Class I and IV Dump were relieved and returned to the Division Air OP northwest of Chenimenil. The first platoon of "B" Battery took up A-2's former positions in protection of the Division quartermaster, and engineer dumps, and adjacent road nets near Deycimont.

By morning of 6 October 1944 the 142 RCT had cleared the enemy from the village of Rupt, and the 143 RCT had reached a point slightly northwest of Rehaupal. Later the same day the 143 RCT sent patrols into Champdray.

Also on 6 October I.A.Z. went into effect again with the provision that no friendly aircraft will fly in this zone, below 10,000 feet, at night. A message to this effect was sent out to all batteries by radio.

On 7 October 1944, letter Headquarters, 443d AAA AW Bn (SP), subject, "Employment of (SP) AAA for Ground Missions", was submitted to the Commanding General, 36th Infantry Division. This letter explained in some detail the capabilities and limitations of the T28E1 and the M-16 half-tracks when used in infantry close support roles.

On 8 October the 141 RCT launched an attack toward Herpelmont, but when extremely heavy resistance was encountered, a limited withdrawal was ordered in this sector. The 143 RCT cleared Lavaline - Haux road almost to Rehaupal.

Narrative - Operations In France (Contd)

General Order number 89, Headquarters, Seventh Army, dated 8 October 1944 directed that the 443d AAA AW Bn (SP) reorganize 18 October 1944 under T/O and E 44-75, 19 April 1944 as amended by Change one, 31 May 1944, and Change two, dated 16 July 1944.

Also on 8 October 1944, General STARR, AAA officer, Army Ground Forces, and General SHELAKER, G-3, AAA command, Richmond, Virginia inspected the gun tracks and positions of the first platoon of "C" Battery and the second platoon of "D" Battery, and on the following day General GREEN, Commanding General, AAA command, Richmond, Virginia, visited the battalion forward command post and inspected one of "D" Battery's gun positions.

The 141 RCT resumed its attack on Herpelmont and cleared the town of the enemy on 9 October 1944.

In the morning of 10 October 1944 the Commanding Officer and the S-2 attended a conference at 5th AAA Group at which difficulties, problems, and recommendations for AAAIS warning were discussed. Later the same day the battery commanders were called to battalion forward CP for further discussion of the problem.

At 1115A hours on 12 October guns of "B", "C" and "D" Batteries engaged two ME 109's and four FW 190's flying in three separate flights, evidently reconnaissance, at altitudes of 10,000, 6,000, and 4,000 feet. None of the planes showed any sign of having been damaged by the fire, but their mission was interrupted, and they were forced to leave the area.

The 443d AAA AW Bn (SP) was ordered by the 5th AAA Group on 14 October to relieve the 433 AAA AW Bn and to take over the light antiaircraft protection of the 977 FA Bn (VI Corps artillery) and one battery of the 995 FA Bn (also Corps artillery). For this mission the first platoon of "B" Battery was relieved of assignment protecting supply dumps, and road nets and was sent to relieve the 433d AAA AW Bn west of Le Roulier.

By October 15th the 141 RCT had secured Fimenil and the woods west of the town. The 143 RCT attacked east toward Laval and the 442 RCT, a regiment composed of Japanese Americans and attached to the 36th Infantry Division, attacked toward Bruyeres. The first platoon of "C" Battery was assigned the mission of protecting the 522 FA Bn. This 105mm howitzer battalion was part of the 442 RCT.

The second platoon of "B" Battery assigned protection of the 155 FA Bn, a 155 mm howitzer battalion in general support of the 36th Infantry Division, was subjected to one hour of heavy counter-battery fire late in the afternoon.

on 15 October 1944. One T28E1 and one M-16 were slightly damaged and one enlisted man was lightly wounded and subsequently sent to the hospital. This was the second casualty of the day as one man from "A" Battery's first platoon had been lightly wounded earlier and had also been evacuated to the hospital.

On 16 October 1944, 1st Lt. IRVING C. MYERS and one enlisted man from "A" Battery were returned to the United States on rotation. On the same day one enlisted man from "B" Battery and one from "D" Battery departed for temporary duty in the United States. Lt. MYERS had been with the battalion since the summer of 1942, and had served in Battery "C" in the capacity of assistant platoon commander, battery executive, and platoon commander throughout the seven major campaigns in which the battalion had participated. He had been awarded the Purple Heart Medal for wounds received during an enemy shelling near Mignano, Italy in November 1943.

Also on 16 October, Colonel NYAL L. ADAMS, Inspector General, VI Corps Headquarters, inspected the battalion.

Meanwhile the 143 RCT cleared Laval of the enemy, and patrols pushed on to the outskirts of Bruyeres and Champ Le Duc.

Early in the morning of 17 October 1944, one enlisted man of "D" Battery's second platoon was lightly injured in action and hospitalized while on a ground firing mission. One half-track, after completing its fire mission, had hurriedly backed up to reach the shelter of a house and had hit the man, injuring him slightly.

At 0400 hours, 18 October 1944 four antiaircraft gun sections moved under cover of darkness to a forward position prepared to fire harrassing fire on enemy infantry reserves which might be used in a counter thrust against the attack launched by the 442 RCT and 143 RCT at 1000 hours. Area targets were assigned the antiaircraft gunners in this infantry support role and each area designated was well "hosed" with 50 caliber and 37mm shells. The infantry elements reported that the AAA fire caused considerable confusion among enemy elements and that enemy fire on the right flank of the 442 RCT was sharply curtailed, largely as a result of the heavy harassing fire. The attack of the 143 RCT, meanwhile, had been successful in that Champ Le Duc had been occupied and patrols had gone beyond the town. The ground firing was continued on the following morning when four gun sections again pounded enemy strongpoints and personnel concentrations with streams of heavy caliber machine gun fire and 37mm high explosive projectiles. Fire on predetermined area targets occupied the first part of the morning, but later the crews were ordered to fire on targets of opportunity. Consequently anything that moved in the valley for the rest of the day received instant attention from the antiaircraft gunners. The objectives of the attack were achieved later the same day, Bruyeres being cleared by the 143 RCT and the hills northeast of the town were seized by the 442 RCT.

Meanwhile, on 18 October 1944, the 443d AAA AW Bn (SP) was reorganized under T/O and E 44-75 dated 19 April 1944, as amended by Changes dated 31 May 1944 and 16 July 1944. Under the new T/O, personnel were reduced to 702, including 37 officers, 2 warrant officers and 663 enlisted men. Fifteen enlisted men were transferred out of the battalion to bring it down to its authorized T/O strength.

The infantry mission of the battalion continued through 19 October 1944 with four of our antiaircraft gun sections supporting the attack of the 143 RCT and 442 RCT in the direction of Biffontaine and Lavaline. Upon completion of the mission the gun sections withdrew after dark, receiving some enemy counter-fire from German 20mm "flak wagons". Heavier caliber counter-battery fire had been light during the period, and no casualties were sustained.

One gun section of "A" Battery's first platoon was assigned to support the Second Battalion, 142 Infantry Regiment with harrassing ground fire.

At 1110 hours, 21 October 1944, five ME 109's attacked from three different directions and strafed personnel in vicinity of Le Panges and Champ Le Duc. The enemy planes were engaged by all platoons but one. One ME 109 was probably destroyed.

The first platoon of "B" Battery was relieved of mission protecting 977 FA upon the arrival of the 534 AAA AW Bn. This platoon immediately went into tactical positions defending division supply routes south of Laval.

The "Stack Force" composed of the 142 and 143 RCT's was to hold the line Poulieres - Jussarupt - Rehaupel - La Forge while the 141 RCT passed through the 442 RCT to seize Bois De Boremont. A gun section from "A" Battery was to support the Second Battalion, 142 RCT with harrassing ground fire on 22 October.

On the same day, Special Order number 81, Headquarters, 443d AAA AW Bn (SP) relieved 1st Lt. OSCAR M. PRICE of duty as MTO with this headquarters and assigned him to "C" Battery where he became platoon commander of the first platoon. On the same order Captain WALTER W. HOWIE, Battery Commander, Hq Btry, was appointed Motor Transportation Officer in addition to his other duties.

In the afternoon of 23 October one enlisted man from "C" Battery's second platoon was lightly wounded in action and hospitalized after being hit by shell fragments in the vicinity of Champ Le Duc.

By 24 October the 141 RCT had passed through 442 RCT and advanced several miles against small arms fire from scattered enemy patrols. The second battalion of the 143 RCT continued to clear Bois De Boremont and the next day relieved elements of the 442 RCT which was holding a line along the south edge of the woods near Lavaline. One gun section from "D" Battery supported the 143 RCT in this holding mission. The first battalion of the 141 RCT, meanwhile, had been cut off by a strong enemy counter-thrust, and several attempts to regain contact had failed. Planes were used to drop supplies to the men of the isolated battalion, and all gun crews were cautioned by radio that friendly aircraft would be flying low in the vicinity.

On 27 October, with the 1st Battalion of the 141 RCT still cut off, one of "D" Battery's sections delivered a withering harrassing fire on enemy positions south of Lavaline Devant Bruyeres. Enemy artillery fire and mortar fire fell in the immediate vicinity of the guns both before and after the mission. On the following day the 442 RCT launched an attack designed to relieve the 1st battalion of the 141 RCT, but heavy resistance was encountered and no contact was established. Two men from the first platoon of "C" Battery were lightly wounded by enemy shell fragments, one was hospitalized, the other returned to duty.

On 29 October word was received at this headquarters that 1st Lt. WELLS LEWIS, a member of this battalion for two years prior to his being transferred to the 36th Infantry Division as Aide to Major General DAHLQUEST, Commanding General of the Division, had been killed in action. All members of this organization are united in their feeling of regret at the loss of such a talented and capable officer.

The first battalion of the 141 RCT remained isolated until 1600 hours 31 October 1944 when the 442 RCT managed to establish and maintain contact with the isolated unit. The 442 RCT also pushed ahead to a position overlooking Corcieux valley.

The month of October had been one of intense activity for the battalion although the rapidity of the general advance had somewhat slackened. Ground support roles for the antiaircraft half-tracks had been frequent, and the success of the basic tactics employed was becoming apparent. Infantry men were loud in their praise of the accomplishments of the "flak wagons", and the enemy had felt the power of the antiaircraft artillery in a manner entirely different from anything he had hitherto experienced.
