A.P.O. #36

UNCLASSIFIED

9 July 1944

SUBJECT: "OPERATIONS IN ITALY."

TO : Commanding General, 36th Infantry Division, APO #36, U. S. Army.

1. Transmitted herewith Historical Data of the 111th Medical Battalion for its "OPERATIONS IN ITALY" for the month of June 1944.

2. Operations for the month of June consisted mainly of rapid movements of elements of the Battalion in order to give close support to the combat units. During this operation, the employment of the Medical Administrative Officers in the Collecting Companies in the capacity of liaisons with the Regimental Medical Detachments worked very satisfactorily. On one occasion, due to the rapid movements, it became necessary to divide one Collecting company into three station platoons with Medical Administrative officers in charge of two of these stations, and the Medical Officer of the company in charge of the other. The efficient operation of the Collecting Stations by the Medical Administrative Officers is deserving of consideration by higher Headquarters in the employment of these officers in replacing Medical Officers of which this battalion has had a shortage dating back to the Salerno landing.

3. It is recommended that Field Hospitals be placed under Division control during combat for movement and transportation. During the early stages of the past operation, the movement and transportation was controlled by Corps. This resulted in delaying the movement of these platoons as much as 24 hours, because of the shortage of transportation in the Corps and the necessity of waiting for Corps' approval for road clearance. On several occasions, the Field Hospitals would arrive at the Clearing Station site and before they could finish setting up it would be necessary to move the Clearing Station forward in order to keep up with the situation. In the later stages of this operation, the Field Hospitals were dependent in the Division for their movement and transportation, as a result, efficiency of operation was greatly increased.

4. The shortage of transportation became apparent in the Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment in the early stages of the operation when it was necessary to send vehicles over a great distance for supplies and administrative matters, thereby reducing the mobility of this unit, and caused much unnecessary shuttling of vehicles on already congested roads. With the addition of one $2\frac{1}{2}$ ton truck and one $\frac{1}{4}$ ton jeep this problem would be solved.

 OPERATIONS IN ITALY ******

JUNE 1944

The 111th Medical Battalion under the Command of Lt Colonel Joe J. Pate, then Major, continued its operation before the town of Velletri, which began on the 26 May 1944 from the Anzio Bridgehead. The Division met with very strong enemy opposition in this sector due to the high ground which the enemy occupied. It was at this point that the Division employed infiltrating tactics which enabled the Division to break the German line of defense running East from the Coast, of which Velletri was the keystone. This break-through resulted in routing the enemy and causing him to retreat beyond Rome in disorder.

Collecting Stations "B" and "C" were established on Highway #7 South of Velletri and Collecting Station "A", SE of Velletri. Routes of evacuation for Company "A" were very difficult due to necessity of giving their combat teams close support, and the necessity of using trails for evacuation. The route was very difficult to negotiate by ambulances, therefore, jeeps were employed throughout. The casualties were very high during this period and evacuation routes very long and hazardous, due to the infiltration tactics used. Litter bearers and ambulances were often fired on by snipers especially during dusk and at night.

On 2 June 1944 twelve enlisted men of Company "B" were captured in Velletri, but were rescued by patrols from the 36th Engineers and the 141st Infantry.

The Clearing Station was set up on a knoll East of Cisterna about 3 miles from Cori; from this location the personnel had a panoramic view of the fighting before Velletri.

On the 4 June 1944 a Platoon of the Clearing Station moved to location on Highway #7, four miles South of Velletri. That afternoon the 2nd Platoon of the Clearing Station moved to location 4 miles South of Rome between Highways 6 and 7. During most of the night of the 4-5 June, enemy planes straffed highways 6 and 7 by moonlight. During the afternoon of the 5th, the 1st Platoon of the Clearing Station set up 1 mile South of the Vatican, thereby being the first medical installation moving into Rome.

Casualties of the Division and attached units were very light after the break-through at Velletri. At times during this advance, the Clearing Station set up within 2 miles of our forward patrols. During the night of 5th June, the 2nd Platoon of the Clearing Station which was still set up South of Rome between Highways 6 and 7 was deliberately straffed and bombed, but fortunately no casualties resulted.

On 7th June the Clearing Station moved approximately 25 miles to location on Lago Bracciano and set up in an abandoned enemy hospital. In their hasty retreat the enemy abandoned a large amount of medical supplies, and equipment. From the filthy condition of this hospital, the Germans apparently do not have the sanitary standards prevalent in the American Army. As the advance proceeded North of Rome, it became more and more difficult for the Clearing Station to keep up with our troops. Usually, the Station would be set up from 2-4 miles from our advance units, and within 24 hours the front line would advance 10 to 30 miles. Prior to reaching Grosseto, evacuation to the rear was difficult due to long hauls to Evacuation Hospitals. Only because of the light run of casualties, this did not present a more difficult problem. Upon reaching Grosseto, two evacuation hospitals, a Medical Battalion, and the Medical Supply moved in with the advance Clearing Station which was only about 8 miles behind the lines. Strangely this move coincided with General Marshall's visit to the front line. This medical center looked very much like Anzio.

On the 26 June 1944, the elements of the battalion began moving to a bivouac area 9 miles NE Of Rome for a well deserved rest and an opportunity of visiting Rome. Moves were completed on 30 June 1944. The foresight on the part of the Medical Supply Section in carrying a large stock of Medical supplies from Anzio, and the small number of casualties processed, contributed greatly to the efficient operation of this section in furnishing medical supplies to the five combat teams and other attached units of the Division. Since leaving Anzio and prior to reaching Grosseto the Medical Supply Depot was at times 75 to 100 miles to the rear.

Morale of the troops was exceptionally high during this period, undoubtedly, due to successes of our troops, and also the large amount of souvenirs which were collected.
