during an attack on a town. When the enemy opened small arms fire and the fire of two Mark VI tanks, Lieutenant Regenthal moved to an exposed position to adjust artillery fire on the enemy. Although one of the enemy tanks began firing directly at him, he calmly continued to adjust fire. He had just given the order for a concentration to be fired when a shell landed close to him and rendered him unconscious. On regaining consciousness he found that one enemy tank had been forced to withdraw, and he immediately began adjusting fire on the other. As a result of Lieutenant Regenthal's courageous devotion to duty, the hostile tanks were driven off and enemy small arms fire was substantially reduced, permitting the infantry to continue its advance. Entered the Service from Newark, New Jersey.
